

Multi-scale backward design for data science education

10/9/2020

Author information

Frederick J. Boehm, University of Massachusetts Medical School, frederick.boehm@gmail.com

Bret M. Hanlon, University of Wisconsin-Madison, bmhanlon@wisc.edu

Abstract

We discuss data science curriculum design at the undergraduate level. We apply backward design principles and assessment practices to develop ideas for curricula, courses, and class activities for data science students. We illustrate our strategy with examples from data analysis of texts such as tweets and novels.